1.1 The Organisation

Mission and vision of the organisation
Odanadi Seva Samsthe believes that no human is for sale. Since its humble beginning when 2 social activists, then journalists, were challenged by a street prostitute named Radhamma to actually do something to change the lives of those they were writing about, Odanadi has been committed to providing a safe haven for victims of human trafficking, sexual exploitation, bonded labour, domestic abuse and destitution for the past 24 years. Our grassroots organization has grown to house up to 100 women and children on two separate sites for girls and boys, located on the outskirts of Mysore city, which is in the state of Karnataka. We provide survivors with traditional psychological counselling, as well as introduce and strongly encourage other psychosocial interventions such as yoga, karate, painting and dance. In addition to safe shelter, rehabilitation and ultimately reintegration, we organize and carry out rescue operations throughout Southern India. At times these are carried out with local police and other government persons; other times we rely on our highly successful social policing program through vigilance committees, an innovation developed by Odanadi, in villages and rural areas. To date, Odanadi has played an integral role in the dismantling of 62 criminal networks, exposing 144 criminal offenders and rescuing 2,800 trafficked persons (including 400 children/minors). The third prong of our work involves active advocacy, awareness building, and training civil society, NGO and government functionaries in ways to curb the problem of human trafficking. To that end, we play an active role in the policy-making process as well.

1.2 The Project

Start date of project	January 1, 2013
End date of project	June 30, 2014
Target group(s)	Survivors of commercial sexual exploitation / human trafficking
Number of individuals reached	250,000

Background on the need for this project

Odanadi has had a long history of successful advocacy campaigns. One such example is our fight for reservation for children who have been commercially and sexually exploited or born to sex workers. In India, mentioning caste is mandatory for claiming benefits of reservation in educational institutions; however, many of the children in our care do not know their caste, religion or in some cases, their family name. In June 2006, 9 of our children left the caste column blank and were denied transfer certificates for admission to high school. We, in turn, lobbied the primary and secondary education minister and mobilized other advocates, which resulted in a lively debate and finally an official circular stating that these children have a fundamental right to education and that no one can reject admission to students for such reasons.

Moreover, because of our unyielding campaign, in July 2011 the University of Mysore agreed to hold 2 seats each in graduate and diploma courses and 1 seat in all post-graduation courses for sexually exploited children. These students are also given 50% concession in admission and other fees. This permanent rule change is the first of its kind in India. We plan to promote this as a replicable model across the state of Karnataka and the nation and also organize a national conference on expanding this reservation policy and opportunities for destitute children.

Cycling as a tool to engage young people

2013 will be Odanadi's 25th anniversary, and as such, we are planning many special activities. One program in particular will continue in the tradition of our past bicycle tours (or 'cycle jathas' as we call them), but with a different goal and be of a wider scope. These are no ordinary bicycle rides. Our 2009 jatha was a creative collaboration between 20 survivors of sexual exploitation and 10 foreigners from other countries to cycle continuously for 30 days over 1000kms to 60 villages in Karnataka. In each village, the Odanadi girls made presentations or enacted dramas to educate the villagers about human trafficking and environmental justice. We planted a tree in each village as a gift from Odanadi and as a reminder about the issues discussed. The intention of this jatha was to raise awareness, build confidence, and strengthen communities.

In that spirit, the next cycle jatha in 2013 will address the multi-faceted issue of mainstreaming survivors of sexual violence and commercial exploitation. The main objective of this jatha will be to establish a reservation category for child survivors of commercial sexual exploitation in other educational institutions within India.

The projected plan

Since our initial project proposal to Free a Girl, we have had a number of discussions with our NGO partners and friends in other Indian states. Immediately this issue became relevant to them, and we realized that there would actually be scope to organize in all of the Southern States (Karnataka, Kerela, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh) and possibly Maharashtra, at least to start.

Each state will organize their own cycle jatha, but all under one banner (same uniform, same logo, same mission on two wheels). Our state partners will receive funding and technical guidance from Odanadi and help us to spread this unified message, in their local language, at universities and high schools. In our own state of Karnataka, instead of riding from village to village as we have done in the past, our route map will cover a majority of the 30 districts statewide, over a 2-month period. The other states may not cover as many districts or kilometres, but will definitely select 10 of their youth members to ride to Mysore for the valedictory function.

Our primary goal is to inspire and galvanize a movement of young people in the fight against human trafficking. Each day on their 2-month tour, the cyclists will rally with other students from different universities, meet with respected persons like writers, community leaders, celebrities, MPs and MLAs, engage the media, as well as put pressure on government homes to raise their standards and quality of care for commercially and sexually exploited children.

Free a Girl Award 2012

The proposed schedule and budget

January 2013: NGOs meet in Mysore to work out logistics and policy points.

February 2013: Students from various states meet in Mysore to get to know each other and team build.

March 2013: State-level meets to involve influential and known persons in the campaign.

April & May 2013: Cycle jatha in 5 South Indian states, culminating at University of Mysore.

June - December 2013: 6-month fellowship for 10 young leaders to further organize on their campuses.

March 2014: University chancellors meet to share experiences and make reservation policy changes.
